BASE BALL PRIDE

If it is a good thing to exhibit pride in a good local baseball team, it is equally reasonable to exhibit pride in prosperous local concerns of all kinds.

That Ogden is taking more and more interest in her local in-dustries is evident by the increased sale of Uprose Aurora from the sleeping wave, And blushed the while her face reflected there, Nor wondered that all men should praise it so, And lightly vaulting to her chariot Swift sped her steed the fading stars among, And as she went with rosy fingers plucked Night's sable veil aside and all the hills Of green-clad Palastine stood there revealed In purpling glories.

Now flamed the kindling lamp of day above The dark West's lessening rim and gilded Hebron's hoar facades, and wrought with magic Brush on minarets, and domes, and erstwhile Silent mosques, and rained a flood of light Through her deserted streets. The sacerdotal Chant of cinetured Priests wailed low and along The sinuous aisles and through the vaulted Naves. The victim bound beside the smoking block Saw gyve and knife, and sacrificial fire, And knew his hour was come.

Before his open tent on velvet turf The ruminating herds of Abram fared. And midst the scene grief-stricken Hagar Stood alone, save him whose bitter faunt Derided Israel's heir because of Sarah's Envious hate. With scornful mien the haughty Hebrew bade her where the skies and mocking Shadows met, and killed her with a word Before her stretched Beersheba's naked wastes. Ere her unwilling feet the shifting sands Strode o'er, her ashen lips thus spake:

"I was a virgin when my fresh young face Peered from the hordes of Pharo's bondage race: The breast I nursed, defiled by slavish chains, Imbrued the blood that courses through my veins.

"The home-sick eagle in a gilded den, Cries to the hights beyond the human ken: He beats the bars when calls the distant scream, From far off aeries where the lightning gleam.

"The prisoned lark, God's own sweet child of glee, Sings though its heart is breaking to be free-All that has life, and bred on Nature's plan, Love Liberty, from worm to peerless man.

"I woke when life's small day was just begun, To have a glimpse of Freedom's holy sun, The ray so brief was like a miser's dole, It only drove the iron deeper in my soul.

"To deck thy throne, nor recked the subject's scorn, You plucked the rose but left the hurtful thorn To cure an ache that whelms the heart with grief, You bind the fetters with a withered leaf,

"The whirlwind that I reap by you was sown-The flower you gleaned was dead ere fully blown: Thy false words cry from out Truth's sunless grave, And curse me with the shame that I'm a slave

"O. Pitying God! Forbear the destined fate That yokes my life with undeserving hate, O, let these tears, the contrite heart I bear, Go up and plead thou wilt in mercy spare!

"And I must leave the dream of love behind And pour my hapless wail upon the wind To bear it onward to some jungle lea, Where beasts, predaceous like yourself, are free.

"For this obedience to the will of God, My recompence is his chastising rod-The only balm for the envenomed smart, Is to renounce the birthright of my heart!

"Rather than that I'd dare eternal death In gulfs surcharged of Shoel's fetid breath, Aye, though the Furies, choked with vengeful wrath, Sowed hissing serpents in my wandering path!

"There is no passion equals mother love. Not even God's, nor anything above; Ere I'd forsake my child in heaven to dwell, Rather my bed with him in endless hell!

"Sweet Angel Hope farewell! By thee unblest. I lay my cheek upon thy withered breast Fading thou art like driftwood from the land-Fading like mists dissolving o'er the land!

No more she said! Like some nomadic sprite She went an outcast to a hopeless night. And the coarse garb the Semite women wear But scarce concealed a form superbly fair.

On vagrant brambles hid along the way In drifting sands that o'er the desert lay. She toiled unmindful of the painful spur-What in this hour is thorn-torn flesh to her!

Her face, tear-blistered of a nameless woe Was set toward Shur, a journey long and slow, The sun her guide by day, the stars by night, And Ishmael sole companion of her flight,
